Konica Minolta Business Technologies, Inc.

There has recently been several news reports regarding a study conducted at Queensland University of Technology in Australia that evaluated potential particle emissions from printers. While no Konica Minolta products were tested in the study, we felt it important to let you know our position on the issue.

As part of our overall corporate policy we have a strong commitment to the safety of our customers and their environment. It is a key element from the initial development stage of any new product. Our printers are evaluated for emissions in accordance with recognized international standards. They meet the environmental standards and labor safety standards for all countries. They also meet the even more stringent certification criteria for eco labels like the Japan Eco Mark and the German Blue Angel mark.

We are committed to the safety of our products and to minimize the environmental footprint of our product lines while provided our customers and partners high value solutions to their document production requirements.
